

Gender equality at work

Fair SA, Izane Cloete-Hamilton, APMP member

When you hear the word “union”, what comes to mind? Masses of unruly, aggressive people looting shops and damaging property? Or fat-cat politically affiliated unionists lining their pockets at the expense of the masses? Understandable - this is our South African experience.

But what if you could enjoy the benefits of a union without the stigma and toi toi? What if you could join a contemporary and professional union that addresses today’s workplace challenges? Now you can.

Founded by individuals who understand modern-day workplace challenges, Flair SA is a national trade union and registered non-profit organisation that promotes gender equality at work. We pursue a workplace that does not tolerate discrimination based on gender, pregnancy, sexual orientation or marital status.

Joining Flair SA gives you the benefit of being part of an apolitical organised group who pulls together around workplace issues, so you don’t have to face them on your own, as an individual.

We support our members with all labour matters, including employment contract review, grievances, unfair labour practices and unfair dismissal. Our primary focus remains the advancement of gender equality in the South African labour market.
